SYNOPSIS:

SPEED COMEDY

"THE JANITOR'S WIFE"

The Janitor discovers his wife has posed for a picture which Barry an artist living in the same apartment house, has painted and sent to the Art Exhibition.

At first the picture proves a failure and the artist becomes despondent and attempts to commit suicide but is unsuccessful. The Janitor arrives on the same spot some time later with the same intent in mind, but when he sees the other man's clothes on the bank, an idea strikes him. He dons the supposed-to-be dead artist's clothes and finding a ticket in the pocket of the coat, goes to the Art Exhibition. There he finds the picture of his wife which Barry has painted wins first prize; and realizing that he is wearing Barry's clothes and believing him to be dead, the Janitor collects all the prizes.

A big celebration takes place in a nearby cafe, and the Janitor's wife, having found her husband's clothes on the bank of the lake and thinking him dead, collects his insurance and goes to the celebration with the insurance man. Trouble starts right away when she finds her husband there very much alive entertaining a lot of models, and even worse trouble starts when the real artist comes along and tries to get square with the Janitor for masquerading as him and collecting the prizes.
